Miamisburg engineering firm opens Nebraska office

Dayton Business Journal

ADF Engineering Inc. has opened a new office in Nebraska.

Miamisburg-based ADF Engineering, an engineering and consulting company specializing in the food processing and renewable fuels industries, opened the branch office in Omaha in the first week of February.

Alex Fishman, president of ADF Engineering, said the Omaha office will help the company service current clients and gain new ones.

"It's in the heart of the Midwest cornbelt where there is great potential for new clients and some of our clients are already there," he said.

The new office will start with one employee supported by the main office in Miamisburg, but Fishman said he hopes to add employees after testing the market.

He said the current economic climate has given his company opportunity.

"We know our industry very well and we are faster to react and capture business," Fishman said.

Locally, the company has done work for Minneapolis-based Cargill Inc., Irving, Texas-based Flowserve Corp. (NYSE: FLS), Behr Dayton Thermal Products LLC and New York-based Pfizer Inc (NYSE: PFE).

ADF Engineering employs 20 people and has another office in Memphis, Tenn.
