From The President's Corner

Greetings from ADF!

As consulting engineers, we see our clients' projects firsthand. We know your production facilities across the country have been struggling with supply chain issues, qualified labor shortages, consumer demands, and everything in between. We understand the severity of this disruption and quickly pivot to listen to your needs. So, how can we take these challenges and turn them into opportunities?

We begin with the end in mind.

We've helped numerous clients get their projects back on track by taking a holistic look at their situation and developing the blueprint to "right the ship." I invite you to read our latest article, where we give you five tips for keeping your projects on track.

If you'd like to discuss your project challenges with one of our experienced engineers, please contact us.

Happy International Women's Day

Today is International Women's Day and I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the contributions of all women around the world, especially our employees here at ADF.

I deeply appreciate the hard work and effort they put forth every day to deliver value to our clients and make our company successful.

- Alex Fishman, President ADF Engineering

Five Ways to Keep Your Projects On Track

Our industry has been hit by what we have coined "the snow globe effect." Everything has been shaken up, and as things begin to settle, the landscape that was once familiar has completely changed.

In this article we cover five ways you can evaluate your projects and keep them on track.
